In some cases, the state itself can be the existential threat, and the nation within, the referent object. One of the most vulnerable nations susceptible to human insecurities are the Kurds. Without statehood, the Kurdish Nation largely crosses borders between four states – Iran, Iraq, Syria, and Turkey.

Studies have shown that SNAP can counteract food insecurity and lower healthcare costs for recipients by about $1,400 per person—costs that state governments will likely bear in the absence of SNAP assistance. Without SNAP benefits, many will be forced to choose between having food to eat or a place to live.
