- Provide differential reinforcement of a behavior which is not what it was before.
  - When behavior is variable, it provides more variants that may be reinforced.
- Describe shaping in terms of signal detection theory. In shaping, the experimenter provides reinforcement for the target response, called a signal.

In this study, camouflage behavior and collaborative behavior are taken as representative social responsibility behaviors. Based on the social action theory, the impact of relevant influencing factors is empirically examined and stakeholder's selection of these two behaviors toward megaproject social responsibility (MSR) is explored.
